Violence belongs to biological evolution. Intelligence, tolerance, empathy, meaning and purpose belong to the evolution of consciousness. The author has created a unique path to understanding the third dimension of life. Acknowledging the role of religion in life, he says that one does not have to be religious in order to find spirituality or the third dimension. Through the conditioning of our upbringing, religious beliefs may even be a stumbling block to finding ones true self, free of pre-conditioning or opinions. All known facts and learning, need to be examined for rationality. Emotions and feelings alone are not a solid foundation for a philosophy of life. Paradoxically he says that if God existed he would admire us for finding the third dimension without his, i.e. God's, help! The question then arises what if God does not exist? He writes for those who, like himself, have been looking to free themselves from the guilt of not believing in the existence of God. This book offers that path; it is 'Sybe's Divine Comedy of the Absurd'. His pilgrimage and discoveries can be followed in the excellent reference included at the end of the book.
