Excerpt from The Natural Wealth of the Land and Its Conservation: Address Delivered by Mr. James J. Hill, White House, Washington, at the Conference on the Conservation of National Resources, May 13 15, 1908
The two-fold significance of this meeting is found in the comparative novelty of its subject matter and of the method by which it has been approached. The subject is the conservation of our national wealth. And a careful study of our national economic resources.

Two years ago, in an address delivered before the meeting of the Minnesota State Agricultural Society at St. Paul, I reviewed the practical consequences and the statistical proof of that national wastefulness which competent scientific authority had already set down as distinguishing the American people. From data of the highest certainty, no one of which has ever since been called in question, I then forecast some of the conditions certain to arise within the next half century, when the population of this country will have grown to more than The facts were pointed out, not in the spirit of the alarmist, but in order that attention might be directed to the way by which the nation may escape future disaster. So rapidly do events move in our time, so swiftly do ideas spread and grasp the public mind, that some policy directed to the ends then set forth has already become a national care. It is this policy - the conservation of national resources, the best means of putting an end to the waste of the sources of wealth - which largely forms the subject-matter of this conference. For the first time there is a formal national protest, under seal of the highest authority.
