In this issue John M. Collard writes about the importance of incentive-based management compensation and how it serves the company as a whole. In our Short Notes we focus on bankruptcy and how a business failure can actually be a good thing. After all, most successful entrepreneurs and even Donald Trump failed numerous times before they became successful. Gary Jacobson and Andrew Rogerson discuss who to buy and sell a distressed business and what to watch out for. But we also have every interesting articles from Loretta Ritorto and Sen Bhaskar about organizational silos and maturity levels in organizations.
